What about competition? Will the market ever become saturated with too many writers?

Julia received this question about Sell Your Writing Online NOW \(SYWON\).

Her reply: "With billions of people online, and millions of Web sites, and each writer having limited output... no. :-)"

She's right. :-)

Don't worry about competition. In the days when I was actively client hunting (I can't take on any new clients at the moment), I was always amazed that every client was an individual, with individual needs, even in the same industry. Every writing job was different.

You're unique. In the entire world of writing, there will never be another writer who's like you: you have unique talents and strengths, and as you increase in skill and develop your range of writing services, you will attract clients who want to work with you, because you inspire them.

To all intents and purposes YOU have no competition at all.

How much money can you make writing for the Web?

As much as you want to make – you're limited only by your know-how and your imagination. I created Sell Your Writing Online NOW \(SYWON\), so that you would have ALL the tools you need to build an amazing income from your writing.

To show you the Web's potential for you, here's what two writers are doing: Web writing for money – bootstrap your writing business.

What's the best way to answer my writing services clients' queries?

This question comes up frequently. Once your writing services Web site is online, you'll get loads of email queries every single day.

While it's great that people are interested in your services, many/ most of these queries are a huge waste of your time.

There's no way you can run a profitable writing services business and hand out free information day after day.

So, what do you do? You can't ignore these queries, can you?
